

A spectrometer is an optical instrument for producing and analyzing spectra. Light is emitted or absorbed when an electron changes its orbit within an individual atom. The importance of the spectrometer as a scientific instrument is based on a simple but crucial fact.