

Childhood is one of the things that can shape a person's personality and future?I became very nervous and my hands started shaking and I couldn't continue, so the teacher started calming me down and told me that I was still young and had many years ahead of me, and she assured me that I could try again next year, she was confident that I would succeed, and while she was talking I started crying, she hugged me, comforted me and gave me a piece of chocolate, and I promised her that I would come back next year, and I went back to my class, she treated me like this even though she didn't know me before this meeting, as she was teaching in middle school, specifically the seventh grade, while I was in the sixth grade, and from that moment a deep affection developed for this teacher, and I was very excited to be one of her students in the seventh grade, and indeed in the seventh grade I memorized the section and read it to her and succeeded and was honored, I was very happy, and her lessons became my favorite, and I feel sad if she is absent from school, she was and still is my favorite teacher. One day, I decided to memorize a part of Amma, After I finished memorizing the part, I went to the teacher responsible for listening to the students' recitations and evaluating their memorization, but unfortunately I made many mistakes and forgot some verses. She remains my favorite teacher.
