

A normal good is a good for which the demand increases if income increases and demand decreases if income decreases. An inferior good is a good for which the demand decreases if income increases and demand increases if income decreases.