

A paragraph's main idea is the central point or the most important concept it conveys. It summarizes what the paragraph is about and ties together all the supporting details. Typically, the main idea can be found in the topic sentence, which is often the first sentence. All other sentences in the paragraph provide details, examples, or evidence to support this central idea.