

There are two systems of guidance and control to protect the public from unsafe food. The first system is government laws, regulations, codes, and standards specifically designed for the food industry. The second system is made up of controls that the industry unofficially imposes on itself, like those from trade and professional organizations.