

Swiss psychologist Jean Piaget argued that language acquisition is a child's mental or cognitive development, with understanding a concept necessary before acquiring the language form expressing that concept. A good example of this is seriation.