

Another example of what they looked for, especially with regard to including pregnant women in trials, is the Zika virus, which is considered a contagious virus, and there is a special relationship between infection with the Zika virus and a woman during her pregnancy with serious birth defects such as neural tube defects and young children with infants.