

The Mediterranean Sea is considered to be a biodiversity "hotspot" characterized by an unusual diversity for a temperate sea. It contains around 7% of the total global marine fish species with a wide range of both temperate and tropical species being present.