A further problem with the 'positive' images approach development of a burden of representation on ethnic minorities in the media and the arts who, as a result of being isolated within predominantly white media institutions, found themselves expected to stand for their entire ethnic group (Mercer 1990).