

The poet expresses a longing for the wind to blow strongly, believing it to be kinder than ungrateful friends. He contrasts the physical pain of a rough wind to the emotional hurt caused by the rudeness of mankind.