

The importance of studying the likes of Ibn al-Khatib or Ibn Qunfud al-Qasnatini lies in his encyclopedism, and the large number and diversity of his works. He is also specialized because of his roots in every art in which he wrote, and for this reason he is sometimes described as a jurist, sometimes as a hadith scholar, at other times as a historian, and otherwise. It has honorable virtues, as it is a reference for specialists and a role model for reform, and this is one of the most important things that our study aims to achieve and develop. I mean, how do we embody it?
