

Oman is an arid country highly dependent on rainfall for its fresh water supply and groundwater recharge. The suggested strategy not only calls for local community participation in water management programs, but active involvement in devising and implementing these policies. Sea water intrusion, increased salinity, depletion of aquifers are all being experienced.