

Counterfeiting means imitating an object or products with an intention to steal, destroy or replace an asset, for use in illegal transactions, or to deceive consumers into believing that counterfeiting has an equal or greater value than the original. Many products are imitated for example, the cars, phones, machines and other products like the milk, the medicines that may be dangerous on our health.