

Caitlin Clark makes a splash in front of the Pacers crowd. The first pick 1 of the last Women's Draft made her first appearance in front of the audience at Gainbridge Fieldhouse. We don't know if the seat was comfortable. Installed at the wheel of an IndyCar, Caitlin Clark in any case made her first appearance, since she was drafted in first position last April, at the Gainbridge Fieldhouse, where she received a nice ovation from the 17,000 spectators present. It was during the third round of the series between Pacers and Bucks, in an enclosure to which she will have to get used since the shooter will wear the colors of the Indiana Fever, which also plays there. Caitlin Clark didn't speak, but she joined her new Fever teammates midway through the second quarter for a T-shirt toss in the stands.", launched her teammate Erica Wheeler in response to the announcer when asked what the objective was for this season: " That's what we want, we have the necessary elements to do it. We want things to happen like this every night. The opponents change rooms to face him " Playoffs!"
