

The heat of fusion is the amount of energy that is required to completely melt (convert from solid to liquid) a given substance while the heat of vaporization is the amount of energy that is required to completely vaporize (convert from liquid to gas) a substance.