Discovery and Preclinical Testing: Target Identification: Researchers identified dipeptidyl peptidase–4 (DPP–4) as a potential target for type 2 diabetes treatment. Animal studies demonstrated its ability to improve glycemic control without significant adverse effects. DPP–4 is an enzyme that deactivates incretin hormones, which are involved in the regulation of blood glucose levels.