

First, the study reviewed the literature on the four main areas of employee engagement: well-being, motivation, communication, and satisfaction. It then examined primary data obtained from in-depth interviews and employee surveys to assess the current level of engagement of the Ministry of Industry and commerce. Only 30% of employees reported high levels of engagement, according to the results, suggesting there is plenty of room for improvement