

Software is more than just a program code. Engineering on the other hand, is all about developing products, using well-defined, scientific principles and methods. Software is considered to be a collection of executable programming code, associated libraries and documentations. A program is an executable code, which serves some computational purpose.