

Policy Development: Governments must develop policies and strategies that align with the evolving job market, involving research, collaboration with industry experts, and stakeholder consultation to anticipate and address future skills needs. Education and Training Systems: Governments can invest in education and training systems to equip individuals with future skills, including funding educational institutions, promoting vocational training, and supporting lifelong learning initiatives for example HRDF in KSA.