

The reservoir provides a means of holding surplus fluid, its purpose is to receive, store and supply fluid to and from the system. It maintains a surplus, so that in the event of a leak the system will still have sufficient fluid to operate correctly.