

, the Ramesseum was established early in Ramses II's reign around 1279 BCE and continued to be an important site throughout his reign and beyond. Its historical significance extends from its construction during the New Kingdom to its status as a major archaeological site today.