

Recently I was shopping for some shoes online. After a little bit of research, I found out that advertisers can save information about what people shop for and then show them ads for the product on other websites they visit. I saw advertisements for the exact same shoes on other websites. They were there when I was reading the news, watching videos, and even checking my email. How could this be?