

Renewable energy sources are forms of energy that are replenished naturally and can be used to generate electricity or provide heat. Additionally, renewable energy sources are abundant and widely available, reducing our dependence on imported fuels and increasing energy security. These sources include solar, wind, hydroelectric, geothermal, and biomass energy.