

Learning a foreign language is crucial in today's world, making it a key component of many global education systems. Contrary to popular belief, bilingualism doesn't require equal proficiency in all language skills; individuals' linguistic abilities can vary significantly across different skill areas.