All matter transmits sound to some extent, but a material medium is needed between the source and the receiver to propagate sound. The propagating disturbance in the sound–conducting medium is in the form of alternate compressions and rarefactions of the medium, which are initially caused by the vibrating sound source.