

The days passed. He continued to teach Dantes history and English and other subjects. Faria talked about his treasure, and he thought about ways of escape for his young friend. 'I am afraid that I will lose the letter,' he said to Dantes. 'Then he burnt the paper. Faria could not use his arm and leg, but his words and thoughts were clear. Learn it -- every word.'