

Positive feedback in lactation and the onset of labor involves a loop where a starting event triggers a response, which then reinforces the initial event, creating a cycle. The more the baby feeds, the more oxytocin is released, and the more milk is produced.