

Access control is a combination of hardware and software that controls access to entry points of a structure or property. It is varied in type and complexity. However, most card access control systems consist of the following basic components:

- User facing: Access cards, card reader and access control keypad.
- Infrastructure: Electric door lock hardware, access control panels, access control server computer and low voltage cabling.
- Admin facing: Access management dashboard, integrations or API.