The novel coronavirus SARS–CoV–2, first detected in Wuhan, China in December 2019, causes the respiratory illness COVID–19. Its highly contagious nature, primarily spread through respiratory droplets, led to a global health and economic crisis. Fever is a key early symptom of COVID–19 infection.