

Did you know that a drop of your blood can predict diseases you may develop in the future? The information in DNA can help determine a person's risk of developing certain diseases years from now. This is possible through genetic testing—testing that analyzes the genetic information found in the cells of your body. Each cell contains a sample of DNA.