

It's September. Where is it coming from?" He stands up and looks around, but he can't see the guitar. Will runs along the corridor. Where is the guitar, and who is playing it? He stops outside an apartment and listens. Nothing. So he goes down in the elevator and goes outside. Upstairs, Anna takes her guitar and goes inside. She closes the door to the balcony. Will looks at all the balconies, but he cannot see or hear a guitar. He goes back to his gran's apartment. she says. Well, it is important, but Will tells Gran about the girl with the guitar. A week later, Anna is coming home. She can see a young man near the apartment building, and he is carrying a bunch of roses--pink roses. Today, but he is not looking, and he does not see her. Anna walks more quickly, but when she gets to the building, there is nobody there. She gets into the elevator. There is nobody in the elevator, but she can smell roses--beautiful pink roses. One day, Anna comes home and finds Gran at the door of the building with a lot of bags. she says. At the apartment, Gran says, "Come in, dear." "These are lovely apartments, aren't they?" "Would you like some coffee?" asks Gran. Gran brings some coffee into the room. says Anna. She tells Anna about her apartment and about Charlton. Later, Anna gets up. "I must go now," she says. Will meets Natalie, and Jane, and Katie, but he doesn't meet Anna. Will and his gran are sitting on the balcony in the sun when suddenly Will hears a guitar. "Excuse me, Gran," he says, "I will be back soon," and he runs out of the apartment. "Can you come?"
