

The social media and the news sources online run the day are to the largest extent driven by the undoubtedly cumulative effect on the way we people consume news. Thus, the digital revolution not only allows us to have access to news anywhere and anytime but also has its own downsides. Furthermore, policies related to traditional journalism as well as to the evolution and maintenance of the top-notch journalistic content are welcomed, since both concerns are the main factors of success and survival in information society.