

enables the body to take in oxygen and expel carbon dioxide. It consists of structures that move air in and out of the lungs, as well as the lungs themselves, where gas exchange occurs. consisting of major structures spanning the nasal cavity to the diaphragm, plays a crucial role in cellular respiration, sensing odors, and maintaining acid–base balance