

This highlights ethnicity and social inequality as key factors in L2 learning. Giles and Brye (1982) argue that language learners often define themselves by ethnicity and identify with their own group. This leads to insecure social comparisons with other groups. Giles and Brye (1982) also identify several criticisms against the inter-group theory.