

People who always succeed are those who are keen to learn something new every day – be it learning about other cultures or learning a second language. There are tangible benefits to being bilingual: It can help you in your career; It can improve your memory and brain functions; It can help increase your understanding of the languages you already speak. As more companies trade internationally and create relationships with other countries, employees are often asked to travel for work, enhance these relationships, or be relocated abroad. At Middlebury Language Schools, we are strong advocates for the importance of mastering a second language. Living in an interconnected world means that more and more jobs are advertising positions where knowing more than one language is essential. A second language can drastically change your career.
