

A literature review on road accidents would typically cover factors contributing to accidents, such as human error, road conditions, Vehicle design, and external factors like weather. It might also explore the effectiveness of various interventions, such as traffic laws, road safety education, and technological advancements like autonomous vehicles.