

Introduction Writing is an important activity and skill that is highly valued in the culture of all societies. It is a fundamental skill in the world this phenomenon, commonly referred to as "poor English writing skills," has significant barriers to personal and professional development, affecting students' academic performance, teacher career prospects, and overall self-confidence. One primary factor contributing to weakness in English writing is a lack of foundational knowledge in grammar, syntax, and vocabulary. Without a solid understanding of these fundamentals, individuals may struggle to convey their ideas effectively on paper. Additionally, limited exposure to diverse writing styles and genres can further hinder the development of writing skills. (al araifi ,2020). Difficulties in teaching English apply to all four skills in general and dictation in particular. Al-Khairiy (2019) stated, "Much research conducted in the Palestinian worlds has reported that Palestinian students who are studying in institutions of higher education suffer from serious handicap in the English language" Many consequences could lead to major harm in students' academic performance if they have a weak base in writing Stein (2018). In this research, it was used some strategies in teaching writing to overcome the students' problems in writing descriptive text. Additionally, fostering an environment of freedom and spontaneity in the classroom and instilling confidence in students' souls by emphasizing the value of the English language and the necessity of actual participation in order to break down barriers, as well as working to encourage students to lean toward the language by practicing it in real life (Al-Damour, 2018). The function English language teachers are expected to play in helping students write better in the language according to Arafat (2017) may be summed up as helping them overcome the challenges of learning it by smiling kindly and being patient with the varied things that pupils do. Along with using all of the positive skills, he has acquired; the teacher must also engage the pupils' senses and make use of contemporary educational technologies. An essential skill aims at giving learners the opportunity to develop the proficiency they need. Therefore, it can be said, teaching strategies is way of choosing the methods and technique of teaching in achieving the objectives of the 7 learning.
