

Use Cases of Centralized Systems Small Office Network: Many offices use one main computer to run things. Traditional Client–Server Architecture: A lot of older programs like email, websites, and databases work one way. Standalone Applications: Apps running on one machine do everything locally. It also allows all workers to use things the same way. This main computer stores files for all workers. This is a centralized system.