

Paraguay is a landlocked country in South America with a growing economy, known for exporting soybeans, beef, and hydroelectric power. It is one of the world's top soy producers, and the Itaipu Dam, built in 1973 with Brazil, is among the largest hydroelectric plants. Brazil is a key trade and energy partner, importing beef and soybeans, while Argentina hosts many Paraguayan workers and students.