

Buying a pre-existing software package and installing it represents an alternative, and usually quicker and cheaper, way of meeting customers' system requirements. • Before buying these packages the customer should be clear that his requirements fits into the package functionality.