

Organic molecules are fundamental building blocks of life, essential for the structure, function, and regulation of living organisms. These biological macromolecules are essential components of life, enabling organisms to carry out various functions necessary for their survival and reproduction.