

Displacement creates alienation, but hybridization allows individuals and communities to develop new forms of belonging that reflect their complex histories. Alienation and Belonging: The study addresses the dual sense of alienation and belonging that is central to postcolonial identities.