

Space scientists apply the laws of physics, chemistry and geology to understand the universe and its contents. It is an incredibly broad field and involves many other scientific specialties such as physics, chemistry, geology and mathematics. What are other planets made of and how are they formed? Space science is all about looking outwards from Earth to the stars and beyond. Space scientists try to find answers to big questions, such as: Is there life beyond Earth? How did the universe begin?