

GROUNDING THEORY Grounding theory research is designed to develop a theory of social phenomena based on the field data collected in a study. For example, a researcher interested in mainstreaming in elementary school could observe a number of classrooms and conduct interviews with teachers and students.