

The term "autism" was coined by the German psychiatrist Eugen Bleuler in 1908 to describe some of the symptoms (e.g., being withdrawn or aloof and oblivious to the surroundings) of patients with schizophrenia. The word autism comes from the Greek word "autos" referring to self, which may encapsulate the increased focus on oneself, often observed in children and adults with autism.