

One night. One famous case involves Binti Jua, an eight-year-old female gorilla who lives at the Brookfield Zoo in Illinois, U.S.A. Binti was celebrated as a hero when she protected a three-year-old boy who fell into the walled gorilla area. The next thing she saw was Thunder standing outside her window, neighing and shaking his head as he stomped on the wooden porch. In the middle of the attack, a group of dolphins came to his rescue by forming a protective ring around Endris until he could get safely to shore. Inti was meowing wildly outside Pilar's bedroom and throwing himself against the closed bedroom door. Charlotte woke up with a start, and her heart pounding, as the noise continued. One such story involves a surfer named Todd Endris. Binti picked up the unconscious boy, carefully cradled him in her arms, and brought him to the zookeeper's door so that he could be taken out. Pilar was in a deep sleep when she was woken by her cat Inti. As she escaped her house with Inti in her arms, she saw that a fire was blazing in her kitchen. Pilar could easily have lost consciousness from breathing in the smoke, but Inti would not let that happen. Even though Inti could have escaped the house through a cat door, he wouldn't leave Pilar. The noise stopped as suddenly as it had started, and she heard a horse galloping towards the house. Yet it is not only domesticated animals who have acted heroically. One animal known to be a friend and protector of humans is the dolphin. On dozens of occasions, they have used this intelligence to come to the aid of humans in dangerous situations. Todd was surfing with his friends when he was attacked by a 13-foot (4-meter) shark. At times, even animals commonly considered aggressive and dangerous have come to the aid of humans. A fireman at the scene said. As amazing as this story is, it is not as uncommon as you may think. There are countless stories of animals coming to the aid of humans in life-threatening situations. Often they are alert to danger before humans are and have used this awareness to protect humans from harm. Take the example of Charlotte Lee and her horse. There were only a few farm houses scattered about the area and hardly any traffic. All of a sudden, there was a loud crashing noise from the stable. She was so frightened, she froze; no matter how hard she tried she could not move. She knew enough about horses to know that Thunder was disturbed for a reason, and wasted no time speculating. She quickly got everyone out of the house before the earthquake hit. Part of the roof caved in and crashed into her room. Dolphins are considered to be among the most intelligent of animals. Without the help of the dolphins, there is little chance that Todd would have survived. After four days in the hospital, the boy recovered completely. When Pilar opened her eyes, she saw that her bedroom was filling with smoke. "Without question, that cat is responsible for saving his owner's life. He should be honored as a hero." Animals are said to have a sixth sense for danger. Thunder. One warm, summer night, the whole family was asleep with the windows open. It was normally very quiet where they lived. Thunder had deliberately saved her life. There are also stories of wild animals coming to the rescue of humans.
