

Osteoporosis in older adults is caused by an imbalance of bone resorption exceeding bone formation, mainly due to gonadal sex steroid deficiency. Antiresorptive and osteoanabolic agents have different mechanisms to treat osteoporosis, with clinical focus on stimulating bone formation or targeting bone resorption.