

anthrax bacteria. The bacteria may then multiply, spread throughout the body, produce toxins or poisons, and cause a dangerous illness as a consequence. Anthrax spores are found naturally in soil and animal wastes such as wool, hair, hides, and bones. There is a chance that workers handling these materials will come into contact with anthrax spores.