

Imagine if life as we know it suddenly halted--no work, studies, or freedom to explore. This was our reality in 2020, as the Coronavirus swept across the globe, urging lockdowns and pushing people towards digital solutions. Undeterred, I applied again, switching my field to applied and therapeutic human nutrition at Eastern University. Still recovering, I faced an unexpected in-person competency test for sports education at Sultan University. Despite being unprepared, I prayed and did my best, but unfortunately, I didn't pass. By the end of that challenging year, my experiences shaped me, teaching wisdom, patience, and understanding of human behavior and technology. I became more empathetic, treasuring kindness above all.
