

Vitamin C in the human body provides the activity of certain enzymes and hormones, improves the assimilation of amino acids, stimulates the process of hematopoiesis, phagocytic activity of leukocytes, promotes the production of antibodies, thereby increasing the body's resistance to infections.